Dear Mr Pollock,

I refer to the request which you have made under the Freedom of Information Act 2014 for access to records held by this Department, as follows:

All correspondence between Simon Coveney and Karen Bradley between February 25 and the date of this FOI request.

I refer also to the acknowledgement of your request which was sent to you on 21 March 2019.

I have not identified any records that fall within the scope of your request.

The absence of vital institutions of the Good Friday Agreement is a source of deep concern for the Government, as it is for the British Government. The Government will continue to do everything in its power, in accordance with its responsibilities as a co-guarantor of the Good Friday Agreement, to secure the effective operation of all of its institutions.

Over the past two years, the Tánaiste has been in ongoing contact with the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland and the leaders of the political parties on how this can be pursued.

The British Irish Intergovernmental Conference (BIIGC) met in July and November last year, and discussion items included getting all of the institutions of the Agreement functioning again.

Most recently, Secretary of State Bradley and the Tánaiste met with the leaders of the political parties at Stormont on 15 February.

The meeting sought the parties' views on a credible basis for a new talks process to start as soon as possible.

All parties provided views and it was agreed that the two Governments would engage further with them in the period immediately ahead to seek a way forward with a new political process that can secure an agreement.

Following these further consultations with the parties, the Government does not underestimate the way to go in achieving a resolution, but continues to believe that this can be achieved and that there is an increasingly urgent need for talks to begin.

The Government will continue to work with the British Government, to get the necessary political process commenced to secure an agreement for a functioning Executive and Assembly.
